'TWAS VERY FUNNY, SAYS MR. DUMONT

Idea of Cutting His Own Flying Machine Makes Him Laugh.

Laugh.

"The idea of the Jefferson Guards, of the St. Louis World's Fair, saying that I cut my own thying-machine!" exclaimed Santos-Dumont, the inventor of airships, as he shook the dust of travel from his shoes at the Walfort-Astoria Sunday night. "They said at St. Louis, after my beautiful machine continued, that the Silk has had been cut by myself! That was faise, and I cancel think of any reuson for saying it, except that they shought that I might except that they thought that I might except that they thought that I might except that they thought that I might except that mages from them. Of course ould collect damages, because the glying-machine was left in their care. They were there to guard it.

"I am on my way to Parls to repair the silk bag and shall hurry back to try for the prize. What really happened I think was this: Some cranky inventor of a new airship saw my machine and imagined vain things. He thought that it would somehow make his machine better if mine were destroyed. So he stole into the room where it was kept in the right, slashed it with a heavy knife, and in the morning—pouf! The work of many months, yes, nearly two full years, was sone in a minute.

"I have never suspected anyone connected with the show. But their laying it on me was so funny and mechale for that I feel I ought to say that it is ridiculous. They said that I was afraid to enter the contest. That I was afraid to enter the anything whether has spent the last three years in
